MEDICINAL.

No Whiskey!

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is one of the very best tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whiskey and other intoxicating beverages.

Rev. G. W. RICE, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters:

Cin., O., Nov. 16, 1881. Gents:—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.

A Detective's Ruse.

A man was wanted by the police, says the London Sporting and Dramatic News, and his skill in the art of "making up" and dodging his would-be captors was so considerable that, for a long time, he escaped detection. At length a clever detective was put on his track, and first of all he began to inquire about his associates. One of the most intimate of them was, it appeared, a certain young woman, and about her he first of all found out everything. He had reason to suspect that she was acquainted with the fugitive's hiding place. So the first thing to be done was to follow her one Sunday afternoon, when she was free from her employment. An innocent young detective, in the guise of a carpenter, was called on to watch, and endeavored to strike up an acquaintance, in which design he was not very successful, though he ascertained that Kingston was her destination that afternoon. To Kingston he went, and traced her to a house occupied by an old man, about whom the neighbors knew no more than that he was an old man. He was an elderly invalid, never went to the door, never went out, saw nobody; and how was he to be caught and examined? There is nothing known about him to justify the police in entering the house, and the detective walked around the place, in company with the "carpenter," wondering what to do next. At the back of the house was a garden, in which was a kennel containing a big dog, or rather not containing him, for he was lying out in the sun at the end of his chain. No sign of life was visible in the house. "Jump over the fence and kick the dog; then hide behind the summer house," said the detective to the "carpenter." In a moment the young man was over the fence, and the dog was howling from the effects of a kick in the ribs. Neighboring dogs joined in the chorus, and at the window appeared an old gentleman. No one was about; the dog continued to howl, and incautiously the owner came down the garden to see what was the matter. Beneath the well-made gray wig the detective's keen eye recognized the object of his search, and in a moment the arrest was made.

Odd Ways of Making a Living

For that matter, though, there seems to be money in all sorts of things in New York. There, for instance, is the second-hand furniture trade, which has grown to enormous proportions, and is now one of the leading lines of business in the city. It is hardly worth while to mention the fashionable second-hand clothing trade which every one knows everything about that is worth knowing. Aside from these there are dozens of different kinds of second hand business going on all the time and generally at a large profit to the dealers. We have one class of men dealing in old lead, another in old iron, another in old brass, another in old building material of all sorts, another in broken glass, and so on through a long list of things that seem to have served their only purpose and to be no longer of any use to any one. Gathering old rags and old paper is, of course, a large business in itself, and a profitable one, too. The latest industry is that of collecting the small tin cans that are thrown out after their contents of preserved fruit, meat or vegetables, as the case may be, are used. The tin is scarcely of any value, but it pays to melt down the cans for the solder, and this is now done as regularly as sending rags to a paper mill. Gathering up cigar stumps around the hotels is an old business. The chewed and nicotine-soaked ends are dried, broken up and utilized either for fillers in making new cigars, or worked in with the cheaper kind of smoking tobacco. There are thousands of men in New York who make a living by merely gathering up the refuse of trade and of the household, and putting it in shape to be utilized over again, some of them not only making a living, but getting ahead of the world, too.—N. Y. Cor. Hartford Times.

WILD PROJECT.—A compactly-built, resolute young fellow, with the bronzed face and general appearance of a sailor, walked into the Sun office recently, and made the startling proposition that he would perform the seemingly impossible feat of rowing across the ocean. "Do you propose to journey alone?" asked a reporter. "I do," answered the man. "In what manner of boat?" "One built under my own supervision, about 12 feet long, 4 feet wide, and from 2 to 2 1/2 feet deep, partly covered fore and aft. I will take a drouge or floating sea anchor, which will keep the boat's head to the wind while I catch snatches of sleep. I shall sleep only when the wind is ahead. For I shall row, when the weather is favorable. I expect to average about thirty mile a day, which would use up 100 days in crossing. I shall work all points to best advantage with regard to winds and currents. The sail stream would be favorable, for I will sail along in the northern edge of it. I shall carry a snug lamp, pipe and tobacco for company, preserved food, condensed coffee, and about fifty gallons of water. I shall be thoroughly encased in light rubber during rainy weather, so as not to hinder my rowing. "What is your object in attempting so hazardous a voyage?" "To show the endurance of a man on the water; also to secure a heavy wage. I believe I can get backed to the extent of $5,000 that I will make the voyage in safety."—N. Y. Sun.
